

The Association of Home Appliance Manufacturers (AHAM) provides this safety leaflet as a public service. For information on free quantities for safety organizations, youth groups, the media, public safety officials and others interested in the prevention of range tipping, contact AHAM.

PART
Protect Against Range Tipping

AHAM
association of home
appliance manufacturers

1111 19th Street, N.W., Suite 402
Washington, DC 20036
202-872-5955 Fax: 202-872-5955
www.AHAM.org

Do your PART

Protect Against Range
Tipping

Did you know that free-standing kitchen ranges and improperly installed built-ins can tilt forward when someone applies too much pressure to an open oven door? The possible result is injuries from the tipped range, and scalds and burns caused by hot food and liquids falling from the rangetop.

While such an accident can happen to anyone, small children and older people are especially vulnerable to accidental range tipping. The Association of Home Appliance Manufacturers (AHAM) urges parents to supervise children when they're in the kitchen and to teach them the safe use of the range.

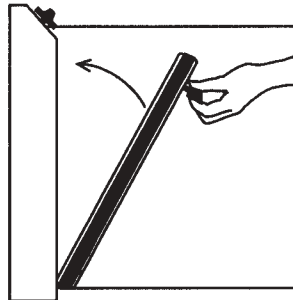

No one should ever use the open oven door for support. That's especially important for older individuals who have difficulty stooping or bending.

For added protection against rangetipping mishaps, make sure the proper anti-tip device is installed on the range. This device secures the range to the floor and/or wall and helps prevent it from tipping forward.

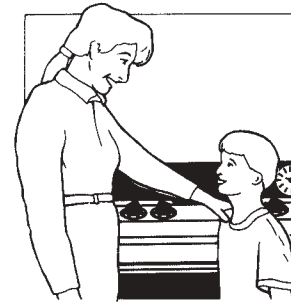

Always be safety conscious when using a range and other appliances. Use them only for the tasks they are designed to do.

How you can do your PART to Protect Against Range Tipping...

Always keep the range door closed when not in use!

Educate children to properly and safely use the range.

Never use the door as a step stool, seat or as a support for body weight or other objects.

For added anti-tip protection, make sure the proper anti-tip device is installed. Contact the range manufacturer, your appliance dealer or an authorized service agent for information and assistance.